Dr. Catalina Mayoral Coker is an accomplished educator, leader, and author whose distinguished career spans more than four decades of dedicated service to teaching and learning. Holding a Doctorate in Educational Leadership, Dr. Coker has devoted 46 years to public education, inspiring students, colleagues, and communities with her passion for excellence and her belief in the transformative power of learning.

Throughout her extensive career, Dr. Coker has taught at every grade level—from early childhood through high school and university, bringing both practical expertise and academic depth to every classroom she enters. For 24 years, she has also served as an adjunct professor, preparing future educators and leaders to meet the evolving needs of schools and students.

Dr. Coker's leadership extends beyond traditional teaching. She created and implemented an Academic Leadership Program designed to develop strong, reflective, and collaborative educational leaders. As a certified Trainer of Trainers for "Time to Teach," she has guided countless teachers in effective classroom management and instructional strategies that enhance engagement, respect, and student achievement.

In addition to her educational leadership, Dr. Coker is a published children's book author, using storytelling to nurture curiosity, empathy, and imagination among young readers. Her creative work reflects the same enthusiasm and love of learning that have defined her teaching philosophy.

Although retired, Dr. Coker remains an active presence in education, continuing to substitute for teaching and mentoring both students and fellow educators. Her lifelong dedication to learning, leadership, and service continues to enrich classrooms and communities alike.

Dr. Catalina Mayoral Coker's enduring legacy is one of passion, purpose, and profound impact an educator whose influence continues to inspire generations of learners and teachers.
